“The New Faces Of War”
A Conference for Historians and Activists

Historians Against the War invites proposals for papers, panels, roundtables, and workshops for our upcoming national conference at Towson University, Baltimore, Maryland, April 5-7, 2013, co-sponsored by the Towson U. College of Liberal Arts.

The theme, “The New Faces of War,” will examine the many ways that war-making has changed in these early 21st century. Possible topics might include:

- the emergence of protracted US wars that stay below the radar of public debate
- the concentration of war powers in the office of the president
- drone warfare and the human toll in foreign countries
- the outsourcing of military functions to private corporations
- the legalization of torture
- the proliferation of spying on US citizens
- the defense budget and its connection to the current economic crisis
- appropriate strategies for opposing war and militarism in their new forms
- the role of antiwar movements past and present.

Proposals are due by 15 December 2012. Please include a title and a short (200-300 words) description of your proposal, a short bio for each contributor or participant, and complete contact information. For group proposals please make every effort to put together a balanced and diverse group of participants. Submit your proposal electronically to conf@historiansagainstwar.org. Any questions may also be sent to conf@historiansagainstwar.org.

Please help us build this conference by spreading the word to other scholars and activists!
